

Evaluating Unlisted Equipment: A Valuable Service Portfolio Add-on for General Contractors Provided by Lewis Bass

Unlisted/Non-UL evaluated equipment can be a building permit blocking event when left to the last minute in your projects. Lewis Bass knows how to get unlisted equipment evaluated and passed by the city fast.

Why should you offer an unlisted equipment field labeling service?

- 1. An expanded, turn-key service addition that will allow you to provide your clients with seamless equipment evaluations that make blocked building permits a thing of the past.
- 2. Passive revenue generation (as much as 20% margin) by up-selling our discounted service rates for equipment evaluations to your clients.

What is a Field Label/UL Evaluation and why do cities enforce it?

Field labeling is a safety review required by the fire department following the National Electric Code. It focuses primarily on electrical safety, but other important aspects of machine and operational safety are also addressed in the performance of an evaluation.

How can I offer this service to my clients?

- 1. We will provide you with an unlisted equipment self-identification flyer to hand out to your clients.
- 2. Clients will report their own unlisted equipment to you using this flyer, or in certain situations where it may be required, Lewis Bass will visit the client on your behalf to identify the unlisted equipment on site.
- 3. You will reach out to Lewis Bass who will prepare a discounted formal quote for electrical evaluation services.
- 4. You will add the machinery electrical evaluation service as part of your fees to your client with your own markup added.

We can also customize the flyer with your own company branding.

The attached flyer below can be customized with your own branding, web address, and phone number. We recommend making this flyer a part of your on-boarding packet for new clients.
